

Apple Confirms Rumours With Watch

Written by Marco Attard
10 September 2014

Apple finally reveals the one device we've truly been waiting for, one CEO Tim Cook says the company has worked "incredibly hard" on-- the much fabled Apple Watch (NOT iWatch!), a wearable device Cook says is no less than "the best watch in the world."

Essentially a squarish device with a dial on the right, the Watch features metal construction, a flexible sapphire Retina display and multiple bands in different materials, it is also said to be the most customizable and "personal" Apple device yet.

Greeted with nothing less than a standing ovation at the Flint Center, the Watch features what is admittedly one of the most interesting Apple innovations in recent years-- a dial-based UI, which the company calls "Digital Crown." It allows users to fluidly zoom into the display, make precise adjustments and control apps in different ways, all with a minimum of touch-based controls.

A second "Digital Touch" button beneath the dial brings up contacts and various communications options.

Apple Confirms Rumours With Watch

Written by Marco Attard

10 September 2014

Apple