

LG Announces Cover for Unannounced Phone

Written by Marco Attard
11 February 2016

LG still has not announced the G5 smartphone, but such won't stop it from announcing a first accessory for the unannounced flagship-- a Quick Cover featuring a touch-sensitive semi-transparent mesh cover.

The Korean company is aware of the absurdity behind the announcement, saying it is actually proof LG is so ahead of the times it is ready to reveal an accessory before the actual product it is designed for. As one does, of course.

As for the Quick Cover, the case allows users to take calls and control alarm settings without need to open the case, making it "the ultimate in convenience." It has a transparent window allowing lets one check the time, date and notifications on the G5's "Always-on-Display" (since the smartphone constantly shows basic information in a black-and-white state).

The cover also has a glossy metallic finish thanks to a "unique film" providing a "smooth and luxurious look and feel."

The "speculative" (LG's words, not ours) G5 smartphone fitting the Quick Cover accessory will be revealed at MWC 2016 on 21 February 2016.

Go Introducing Touch-Enabled Quick Cover for Yet-To-Be Announced LG G5