

Acer Gaming Throne Arrives in Europe

Written by Alice Marshall
12 June 2019

---

Remember the Acer Predator Thronos , possibly the most impressive gaming chair seen not just at IFA 2018, but every other time before or since? This most impressive of thrones is now available in Europe, at least according to WinFuture.

Best described as a cockpit, the Predator Thronos is a gigantic affair reminiscent of something out of a futuristic arcae. Built out of steel, the setup weighs 220kg and consists of a 1.5m tall chair and an imposing motorised arm able to hold three 27-inch gaming monitors in front of the user's face.

The chair reclines by 140-degrees, and rumbles in-synch with on-screen action. Also included are motorised footrests, a control pad for the setup of the chair, footrest and and monitor brace, space for a gaming PC, a small table for the keyboard and mouse and, yes, not one but two cupholders. And since it is a piece of gamer hardware the whole thing is adorned in LED lighting.

How much does such a throne cost? The most basic option, lacking in gaming monitors, clocks at €18000. Adding a trio of 27-inch Predator Z271U gaming monitors brings the price up to €20000, and coughing up €25000 adds a Predator Orion 9000 desktop PC complete with matching headset, keyboard and mouse.

Go Acer Predator Thronos

Go Acer Predator Thronos: This Gaming Chair Costs €18000 \(WinFuture.de\)