As gamers look excitedly at news from the Electronic Entertainment Expo (E3) Razer announces an angular PC peripheral range branded around the upcoming Star Wars: The Old Republic MMO.

The range's centrepiece is the keyboard-- a slim and silvery number complete with a set of dynamic adaptive keys, a range of programmable keys (ideal for all those shortcuts and macros) and a multi-touch LCD panel showing either game information, more macros, or simply your chosen faction's emblem (for the record, we'll be going for the Dark Side).

Last, and maybe least, are "customisable lights"-- or rather, the choice of either red, blue or green LED lights around the keyboard's edges.

The gaming peripheral range also includes a wireless mouse (with x12 thumb buttons), a weirdly hexagonal headset and a mouse mat (in either Sith or Jedi flavours).
