Your more self-absorbed customers might have an easier way of taking self portraits with the Samsung NX mini, a camera with a flip-up 3-inch display and hands-free "wink shot" mode for the perfect selfie.

Once it detects a wink the camera shoots automatically after 2 seconds. The feature even handles multiple persons in-shot for "wefies," as well as a bevy of social connectivity options via wifi and NFC. Clever!

As well as selfie-taking capability Samsung says claims the NX mini is the slimmest and lightest interchangeable-lens camera around, being 22.5mm fat and 158g heavy. The metal body carries a 1-inch 20.5MP BSI CMOS sensor, with shutter speeds of up to 1/6000 sec and a 6fps continuous shot mode.

It is compatible with all Samsung NX lenses (via NX-M mount adapter) as well as three specially-designed NX-M mini-lenses-- the NX-M 9mm F3.5 ED, NX-M 9-27mm F3.5-5.6 ED OIS and the NX-M 1.1mm F1.8 OIS.

"The NX mini's compact, go-anywhere design, as well as its seamless connectivity capabilities keep trendsetting people at the forefront of their social spheres with the ability to shoot a portfolio of creative and fun images," Samsung says.

The camera launches on April 2014 in white, pink, mint green, brown and black.
